A Wife's Story. [CONTINUED.]

CHAPTER II. So I stood that night—a wild, weird night—leaning against my husband with folded arms; loving to measure my insignificance; to be at his side, not much more than reaching to his elbow, yet as high as his heart—to look up into the handsome face so far above me when held erset, so often stooped down tenderly to mine. And I mused over the bitter things of my past life, imagined the happiness to come for both of us, the happiness of hours, days, years, and a whole life spent together; never knowing end of love, nor wearing ness of existence. And I felt peace, and knew rest—for a little while—standing secure in the certainty of possession.

rest—for a little wine—standing secure in the certainty of possession.

We were on our way to Scotland.

The wind blew round as; sometimes driving the waves so violently against the ship's side that the foam splashed up in my face, and driving the clouds recklessly and violently across the wild sky, and the pale struggling moon. And we were rocked up and down, yet standing firm together, the wind and the sca singing us an inspiriting song, a lond sonl-thrilling anthem; but too loud and too shrill for an epithalamium. for an epithalamium.

The other passengers had disappeared one by one—we were alone. I could have remained there forever, I thought, so supported, so serenaded. Breaking into the world of my imaginings came NORPOLE, Oct. 12. The Wandering Jew is Dead.—This morning, the body of Mr. Noah Stall, commonly known as the "Wandering Jew," was found in his house, seated on the soia, but the vital spark had fled; in the deep, dark night, the angel of death had entered his room, and his withering glance had sent the spirit of the victim, affrighted, to lits long home. On the night of the 8th, a colored man residing in the rear of Mr. Stall's house, saw him walking his room until a late hour, apparently in good health; the next movning, the sun arose in wide; but the Wanderer came not forth, as was his wont, to meet them. The neighbors wondered what had become of him; the day passed, another sun arose, but he was still in his position of the day before. The man before alluded to became alarmed, and with a gentleman proceeded to enter the house; and trally the lone Israelite was sleeping—but it was the sleep that knows no waking. He was dead. And in a large house, with himself the only occupant, his family being North, his body bore unmistakable signs of his struggle with the prevailing epidemic.

SUICIDE BY SHOOTING.—The body of a young man named Henry Fredericks, was found lying in the road, back of Crow Hill, 9th ward, yesterday evening, by Mr. George Fenner. A pistol was found by his side, and from the evidences it was apparent that he had committed suicide by sbooting himself in the mouth. The ball had perforated the brain. He had been employed as clerk in the grocery store of Edward Steers, on the Hunterfly road. The cause of the act is unknown. He was twenty years of age, and a German by He was twenty years of age, and a German by birth. Coroner Hanford held the inquest, and a verdict of death by suicide was rendered.

FELINE ATTACHMENT.—Eighteen months ago an officer of a vessel bound from Greenock for Melbourne, got a cat from a family residing in Greenock, and took it to sea with him. The vessel was wacked on the coast of Ireland, but the crew and passengers were all ward and managed to get their luggage where. The officer landed his cat in safety, leaving it at a farm house near the place where the vessel was wrecked. The astonishment of the family to whom the cat belonged may be imagined when, many months after the ship wash, it walked into their residence in Greenock. How it manages a little way thither from the Emerald Isle is a mystery.

A Good Reply. - Urfila, the celebrated doctor, being examined as an "expert," on a capital trial, was asked by the president whether he could tell what quantity of arcenic was requisite to kill a fly. The doctor replied, "Certainly, M. le l'resident; but I must know beforehand the age of the fly, its sex, its temperament, its condition and habits of body, whether married or single, widow or maide i, widower or bacholor. When satisfied on these points I can answer your question." these points I can answer your question.'
